Foreword

Our Social Science disciplines were essentially imports from the West via Colonial rule. Hence, these disciplines have a history of being derivative and imitative, first of the British model during the colonial period and after independence, the American model with the collapse of both the socialist and capitalist projects. In a world where no structures are stable and where politics has become fluid and amorphous, Globalisation has tended to parochialism politics. Transformation has been the keyword in the era of globalisation. Political Science as an academic discipline has been imbibing these changes keeping the nation-state as its central focus to undergo a revolutionary change both in content and theory.

In this regard, we have received innumerable papers on varied themes/sub-themes relating to restructuring so as to drive our discipline closer to the realities of our time.

1. New theory of the state: Sovereignty of nation-states in a globalised world
2. Globalisation and Human Rights
3. Globalisation and Terrorism
4. Globalisation and Public Administration
5. Globalisation, Development and Social Justice
6. Challenges to Federalism
7. Globalisation and Agricultural Policies in India

By virtue of being the President of the Golden Jubilee Celebration Committee, Department of Political Science, Karnatak University, Dharwad, it is my proud
